Standing in the atrium of the shopping mall, I was holding my little tin for donations to assist a school catering to children and young people with physical disabilities. Since we were about to pack up, the coordinator of the collection was checking off the tins and doing the paperwork. Just then, a woman came past and dropped a donation in the tin. As I was about to thank her, she turned from me and addressed the coordinator: "It is a real shame, hey. What does that poor blind boy with the tin do all day?" She asked her. "He studies law" I answered.*

What is at issue in this little anecdote, of course, is the stereotyping around disability – and the assumptions that many people bring to their interactions with a person they perceive to be different. People can very easily assume that an incapacity in one area is often transferred to other areas: I have lost count of the times when people have spoken LOUDLY and S-L-O-W-L-Y to me as blind person. Many or approximately 20 per cent of people in Australia living with disability could recount similar experience. Indeed, many of us have lived experience of much worse things, where our disabilities – and the undoubted imbalances of power they can create – have been taken advantage of power, money or even sexual gratification.

This weekend (Saturday 29 June) Archbishop Peter received the blessed Pallium from Pope Francis. The Pallium is a small woollen vestment (like a scarf) which is worn over Mass vestments to signify his role as the Metropolitan Archbishop of Melbourne. The Pope blesses the Pallium for each new Metropolitan Archbishop each year on the Feast of Sts Peter and Paul, and the Archbishops who receive it come back to their cities where the Apostolic Nuncio (Papal Ambassador) will formally impose the Pallium as a sign of his unity with the Pope and the Universal Church. Let us pray that this moment for Archbishop Peter as our chief shepherd in Melbourne; for all of our priests, deacons and seminarians, and for many more vocations to priesthood, diaconate and consecrated life
